CLUBS TO TRAIN PILOTS OF R.C.A.F.

Ottawa, April 13 (CP).—Royal Canadian Air Force students will be given preliminary training at eight flying clubs across Canada under an agreement reached between the clubs and the defense department, it is learned tonight.

The clubs will be used to supplement the work of R.C.A.F. training bases which are turning out scores of pilots at Trenton and Camp Borden, as part of Canada's expanding defense plans.

Training will get under way at Vancouver, Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg, Hamilton, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax in two months and it is expected 100 students will be trained in a year.

Each club will take four students for a three-month training period. The training will include dual and solo flying for four hours, blind flying, forced landings, aerobatics and elementary ground instruction such as navigation, chart reading, compass reading and receiving wireless signals. The students then will be graduated to R.C.A.F. stations to complete their flying education which usually takes a year.

They will be selected by the R.C.A.F. but will receive their preliminary training from regular flying club instructors.

To strategic bases and positions in European waters warships have been sailing behind smoke screens of secrecy, with major movements centring in the eastern and western Mediterranean. Typifying Britain's watch and ward over the sea lanes are the 16-inch guns of H.M.S. Rodney (1) in firing position. Malta's harbor is shown in (2), where activity has been intense. Closer ties with Turkey may bring back several of the Turkish warships shown. Poland, also linked with Britain and France in an anti-aggression pact, has a naval force in the Baltic, including the world's fastest destroyer, the Grom (3), during trials off Spithead, England. The great French warship Dunkerque in (4) is one of France's many modern naval vessels. Torpedo boats of the Italian Navy are seen in (5) as they went through manoeuvres in the Mediterranean recently off the coast of Spain. In (6) Soviet sailors are shown on the deck of the battleship Marat, part of the Baltic fleet. Russian ships have also been reported passing through the Dardanelles from the Black Sea. One of the 10,000-ton German pocket battleships, Deutschland, in (7), is now on the way to manoeuvres off the coast of Spain with a naval squadron.

Simplicity Marks Rites For Col. Harry McGee

Thousands thronged Timothy Eaton Memorial Church yesterday afternoon to pay tribute to Colonel Harry McGee, retired vice-president of The T. Eaton Company, Ltd., and referred to in eulogy as "one of Toronto's best-loved citizens."

Throughout the afternoon stores, offices and establishments of the firm he had served so long remained closed, and hundreds of employees occupied the special section of the church reserved for them.

Long before the surplused choir entered the choir loft the church had filled with men and women representing many cross-sections of the life of the city.

Conducted by Rev. David A. MacLennan, minister of Timothy Eaton Memorial Church, the service was marked by simplicity. Softly the chimes of the organ played the familiar strains of "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me," and the congregation joined with the choir in the singing of two of Colonel McGee's favorite hymns, "Rock of Ages" and "Abide With Me." In silent tribute at the close of the service the throng of mourners stood as the organist played "The Dead March," from "Saul."

Tributes Paid.

Assisting in the service, Right Rev. Peter Bryce, former moderator of the United Church of Canada, and a co-worker with Colonel McGee in church work, offered prayer. The Scripture lesson was read by Rev. Mr. MacLennan.

"One of Toronto's best-loved citizens, he was loved by thousands of young and old," said Rev. George W. Kerby, principal of Mount Royal College, Calgary, for forty years a close friend of Colonel McGee, in his address of eulogy.

"His life was, and is, an incentive and an inspiration to the youth of our nation. He began as a boy absorbing the ideals of the late Timothy Eaton, and, starting at the lowest rung of the ladder, reached

Calgary, April 13 (CP).—Edward F. Pock, Austrian war veteran and Alberta leader of the Canadian Society for German Culture, today declared the Great War veterans' threat that caused cancellation of the society's meeting here last night was an "insult" to German citizens in Calgary. He added the society was organized under a Dominion Government charter to preserve cultural heritage of their homeland.

GET THE RAKE; SPRING IS HERE

There is snow on the ground, but there is Spring in the heart of Forecaster Frank O'Donnell, who last night happily predicted that Toronto was at last going to get a break in the weather.

"Mind you, there won't be any heat prostrations," said Mr. O'Donnell. "But today is going to be fair and a little milder than yesterday. There is nothing extreme in sight and from now on there should be a gradual warming-up process."

The mercury will rise to a high of about 43 today and by the beginning of next week it should be mild enough for thoughts to stray golfward. The weather yesterday was just about average for this time of the year, with a cool wind serving as reminder that winter has not been gone very long.

Anything can happen in the way of weather changes, and usually does, according to the weather expert, but he believes Spring has at last arrived and is no longer merely a calendar date. Work in gardens now can get under way.

MARGARET EATON PUPILS CONCLUDE SKATING TERM

An informal demonstration in Varsity Arena yesterday afternoon, brought to a close the figure skating season for the students of the Margaret Eaton School. School figures by both juniors and seniors, waltzing, the fourteen step and a free skating ballet were interesting numbers. A comic entitled "Ferdinand the Bull," created much amusement for the audience. Guest skaters added to the interest and beauty of the program. They were Miss Ruth Paul and Miss Marion Lumbers of the Granite Club and Miss Milda Alten. Miss Eleanor M. Keyes directed the demonstration.

McKEE-RICH WEDDING.

Miss Sylvia Ruth Rich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horace J. Rich of London, was married at Glenview Presbyterian Church, to Mr. Samuel Hutchinson McKee, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William R. McKee of Toronto. Rev. Dr. J. Stanley Glenn officiating.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of Alice blue wool crepe, with black accessories and a corsage of orchids. Miss Marjory Meek was bridesmaid, and Mr. Kenneth J. Rich the groomsman.

Japan has been a substantial importer of the metal, receiving 74,662 hundredweight of fine nickel in 1937 and 93,207 hundredweight in 1938. It also bought directly 10,962 hundredweight in matte in the former year and 324 hundredweight last year. In its various forms Germany bought 12,428 hundredweight in 1937 and 17,582 in 1938. Italy purchased 15,681 hundredweight in 1937 and none in 1938.

Next to Britain and the United States, Norway was the heaviest importer, buying 109,395 hundredweight in matte in 1937 and 116,280 in 1938. This was more than went to Japan, Germany and France combined. The rest of the exports were divided among ten other nations.

The figures illustrate the point that forbidding exports to Japan, Germany or Italy would not necessarily bottle up their supply of nickel. Nor could these countries be deprived of other war materials by imposing a direct embargo in the country of origin. All the trading nations would have to make an iron-clad agreement to let no war materials slip through to the totalitarian countries.

It would be easier to blockade the foreign commerce of the aggressors with warships. This is what defeated Germany in the last war and obviously it would mean war at any time.

We have no wish to discourage the thought that if the dictators could be shorn of war materials it would crimp their tactics. It should be done if possible. Canada cannot do it single-handed.

FOR CANADIANS TO CONSIDER.

Prof. W. B. Kerr of the University of Buffalo gave his comrades of the Canadian Legion some frank thoughts when he addressed the Vimy Ridge dinner of the Niagara Falls branch. The scope of his subject, "Canada, the Empire and the United States," enabled him to clear much ground for the benefit of Canadian people, particularly those who cling to the idea that they have no cause to worry about European affairs, with so good a neighbor.

Some of the points may be summed up briefly. President Roosevelt and the heads of the armed forces in the United States regard Great Britain and France as a valuable barrier against totalitarian progress and would lend whatever aid they could without getting into trouble. In this respect the situation is better for Great Britain than from 1914 to 1917 when President Wilson observed strict neutrality. American public opinion is also more favorable to Britain now than twenty-five years ago, because there is an active dislike for the present German regime.

But isolation sentiment in the States is stronger than many people think. The feelings engendered in the American Revolution have been largely overcome, but not entirely banished. Americans in general mistrust the intentions of the British Government. They think Britishers are forever trying to use the United States as a catapaw. The projected visit of the King and Queen is regarded by many as an attempt to intrigue good-will, yet if their Majesties had not consented to the visit it would be looked upon as "intolerable snobbery." For this reason the speaker and the dictator who, with his threatening armies, destroys neighboring nations. Putting together all Christians in Germany, how can they support this warlike and unchristian procedure? They cannot; but the question arises: What can they do about it? If they even speak of hostility to the war lords it means the concentration camps, which now are well filled. But in case of open and general defiance, would pagan rulers dare imprison the bulk of the population? Where would they get their armies?

Following the Pope's Easter broadcast, Catholics in Italy and Germany have the choice of supporting the head of their Church who seeks peace, who declares "Justice requires that sacred rights of human liberty and dignity be recognized and guarded . . ." or the harsh commands of dictators bent on conquest and who travel roughshod over the liberty of the individual.

DEATH CALLS HARRY MCGEE.

The death of Col. Harry McGee leaves a great vacancy in the business and social life of the community. In many respects he travelled far during his 77 years of life: From the little village of Kilcooley, in Tipperary, Ireland, to the first vice-presidency of the T. Eaton Company marked his journeying in the business world; and from an unknown boy, without prestige of any kind, he rose to an enviable place in the esteem of the citizens of Toronto.

Such success is not attained without character — and hard work. Harry McGee was endowed with high character, and hard work was a hobby with him. He knew his talent. When the late Timothy Eaton asked the stocky Irish boy who sought a job in 1883 what he could do, he replied: "I can sell. I am a salesman, sir." In a wonderful way, the years justified this youthful confidence.

In addition to his native ability, Harry McGee had the advantage of "a touch of the brogue" and a delightful sense of humor. He soon became the centre of any social group. He loved his "cronies," another Irish characteristic. And still another was his love of country life. On his neighboring farm, close to nature, he found relaxation from the exacting demands of business. And he was an ardent golfer.

In the business of merchandising his career was exceptional. It is recorded that during his first three weeks with the Eaton Company he didn't get his pay—$6 a week. His employer forgot that he had hired the lad. But that did not matter. Young McGee began to climb, and for the rest of his days he was an increasingly powerful influence in the development of a world-known enterprise. His beginning in business was small, but he scaled the heights. Industry, ability and unswerving honesty brought their inevitable reward. Harry McGee will be sadly missed in the business and community life of Toronto; and far beyond. His delightful personality will be missed by hosts of friends.

ILLUSIONS ARE DANGEROUS.

Lord Baldwin has observed that there are two very dangerous illusions about Britain in parts of the European Continent. One is that the British are afraid of war, and the second is that the British people would never

MAN, THE PLAIN DRESSER.

This annual Easter fashion parade only amuses a man. He may envy the women their keen interest in new raiment, the "kick" they get out of the boardwalk display, but he refuses to make any noticeable change in his own attire. In regard to clothing, man is the incurable conservative.

Recently published pictures covering the last sixty years present the well-dressed male in business clothes at ten-year intervals. The chief changes have been in hats and all toward more sensible headgear. In 1879 there was the funny, squatty little bowler hat, coming down almost to the "sideburn" whiskers. By 1889 the stiff hat had grown higher, and the facial decoration had been reduced to a flowing moustache. After that the whiskers disappeared altogether; man actually took the trouble to shave every day. That wasn't a concession to fashion; it was because beards and moustaches were a nuisance.

In 1879 the top-button coat was popular; also the fancy vest. In 1889 the sack coat appeared—something of an abbreviated "Prince Albert." By 1899 the tailors were doing much better with the sack coat, but the high, stiff collar remained. The 1909 fellow, getting stout, had his coat—still a sack—drawn in at the waist, and the wider trousers gave him rather a ponderous appearance; but the high collar had gone and it hasn't reappeared. From 1919 to 1939 the streamlined influence asserted itself. Men were nice slim figures—in the pictures—sometimes carrying cane and gloves. There was evidence that the cleaning and pressing business was doing very well.

These pictures provide an interesting study. But the point is that, in the main, man has stood out bravely—manfully. It might be said—against extreme innovation in dress. There has been a little yielding here and there, but generally in the way of greater comfort. Knickerbockers and the flowing plus fours may come and go, but always there has been return to the full length trousers. Cynics will say there were physical reasons for this, but let that pass.

Even when obliged by imperative circumstances to don prescribed evening attire, the man with a ten-year-old dress suit hardly will be noticeable in any gathering. Dainty shades, such as midnight blue, have not become "de rigueur," and a shiny old garment will not be criticized by other men.

All this is not set down as indicating that it is hard to get the male of the species excited about extremes in the style of his garments. He just won't wear them. In a changing and whirling world men's clothing is about the only thing that remains steadfast.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We await the discovery by Italy that King Zog is really a Communist.

With early prorogation in view at Ottawa and Queen's Park there will be a speeding up of the parliamentary assembly line.

A Rome newspaper accomplishes something unique in blasphemy by speaking of movement in the standards there was the keenest co-operation between the educationalists and the adult population of the district.

The new program of studies, in comparison with the old-established curriculum, showed an improvement in academic standing each year, he contended. It also has brought a reduction in the average age of pupils passing the entrance examination by six months; an increase in the number of subjects obtained by students in the lower forms; a reduction in costs and an increased ability to do creative thinking.

Parents take a great interest in the privileges offered by the Forest Hill school. Over 30,000 adults, not including pupils at night school classes, visiting the school on the 300 nights it was open last year. The citizens have twice endorsed the system by voting on plebiscites whereby the system was endorsed, he said.

First-Aid Teams Honored After Bell Competition

A dinner was held at the Military Institute last evening for eight first-aid teams from the Toronto Division Plant Department of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

These teams had competed for the company first-aid trophy, which is emblematic of the highest award of proficiency in first-aid work in the company. The competition was held in Toronto under the auspices of the Bell Telephone Centre of St. John Ambulance Association. Col. A. E. Snell, director of ambulance, St. John Ambulance Association was the examining officer. The competi-first was organized.

Major Rogers started his police work in the Barrie district, serving under his father, Major Joseph Rogers, high constable of Simcoe County. At that time Barrie was the centre of the lumbering district of the province and he and his father survived many hand-to-hand fights as law officers.

For over twenty years, Major Rogers was actively connected with the Canadian militia and he was awarded a special medal for his services in Canada's reserve army. He first became connected with the militia in 1872 when he joined the 35th Battalion, Canadian Foresters. In 1882 he was appointed captain in the regiment and retired in 1900 with that title. In 1915 he returned to the service and was appointed to the militia with the rank of major.

For many years Major Rogers was a member of the Chief Constables' Association of Canada being a past president of the organization at the time of his death. He was recognized as one of the best-versed police officers in extradition proceedings, and had an exceptionally keen knowledge of criminal law. He was a member of the Masonic order.

During recent years he spent most of his time at his summer residence near Orangeville. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Jane Stinson Rogers; a brother, R. R., of Lorne Park, Ont.; two sons, Joseph E. and J. P., both of Toronto, two daughters, Mrs. R. G. Peers, Toronto, and Mrs. C. E. Marriot of Hamilton.

KNOX GRADS GIVEN DIPLOMAS

Eight members of the graduating class of Knox College received their diplomas in the college chapel last night at the ninety-fifth annual convocation of the institution.

Following the presentation of diplomas, a lecture entitled "The Reformation and Its Bearing Upon Doctrine" was delivered by Prof. J. L. Stewart, Professor of Philosophy at Dalhousie University, Halifax, N.S.

The Scripture reading and prayer was taken by Rev. William Thomas, M.A., and the benediction was pronounced by Rev. W. T. McCree, M.A.

statement, "He did not withdraw."

With his arm jabbing the air in introduction, Mr. Acres continued: "I will go this far and no further, the member didn't know he was going to be a candidate, I will withdraw. But I was in his riding a year before the election and I was told then who Kennedy's opposition was going to be. All I heard then took place and I will take it back, you take that as a charge. I make just as a complimentary statement of how you got here."

The House howled its appreciation of the explanation and Mr. Acres went on to censure the administration for its lack of constructive policy toward the relief of unemployment.

"If I were Prime Minister today of this province, there would not be one man on relief in twelve months, and if there were I would resign and go back home," he said.

POSED AS MILLIONAIRE.

San Francisco, April 13 (AP).—Nathan Desmond, 50, a suave seour who once sold false faces for living, was sentenced today to six months in jail for a masquerade as multi-millionaire which won him a 28-year-old bride and sent her to hospital with shattered nerves and pawn tickets on her jewels. Police Inspector William Stanton asserted Desmond posed as Claus Spreckels, scion of the wealthy California family, and married Margaretta Davis, orphaned daughter of an army officer.

the vice-presidency. He carried with him to the end the simple faith and trust in those ideals of life and living that were given to him in his childhood in his home in Ireland.

"Cheerfulness was one of Harry McGee's chief characteristics," commented Principal Kerby. "Loyalty was another quality in his life. Loyalty to his home, to the company he served, to his country, to his church and to his ends."

"He was a man of generous impulses, kindly thought and sympathy, a true and loyal citizen of Canada and the Empire, and, with all, a family man," continued Principal Kerby. "He was a man of strong convictions. He possessed an enthusiasm born of a deep-rooted conviction, which, after all, is the basis of achievement."

"CIRCLE-BAR" FOURTH COLUMN

By J. V. McAtee

WHETHER it is the dissenter, the pike or the plain Judas Iscariot in us that is responsible, we do not know, but whatever devilish ferment is responsible we find the Stanley Cup victory of the Boston team extremely satisfactory. It is not only because the Bruins have been obviously the best team in the league. It is primarily because we live in Toronto and not in Boston, and believe it will be pleasant to associate with citizens who have been jolted back to reality by the defeat of their young athletic idols.

Too Much Worship.

We think the adulation bestowed on professional athletes generally is bad for them spiritually and commercially, and tends to weaken the intellects of those who lavish it. It is salutary that an event should prove that their admiration has been excessive and at times ridiculous. A certain amount of living in a fool's paradise is not without its uses; but it is important that when the time comes to vacate the premises one should know what he has been frequenting. It would be a pity if any considerable number of citizens should go through the summer months under the spell of the same delusion that has comforted them through the winter.

Back to Earth.

We can join with others more enthusiastic in admiring the fighting finish of the Maple Leafs. They probably played to the limit of their skill and endurance. They happened to be not quite good enough, as results over the season suggested. They now resume their status of citizenship and shed the garments of demigods, which we think rather a good thing for them and also for their rooters.
